F6355 2005a OCLC Number: (OCOlc)63179498 Subject: Information technology -- Law and legislation -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 11 RESEARCH and DEVELOPMENT Information security is not the only arena for enhanced cooperation in research and development. In the U. S. , federal government support for research and development has slipped substantially. In the aftermath of the Soviet Unions Sputnik launch, federal R and D funding of basic research swelled to 75 percent of all such 4 spending. Seventy cents of every R and D dollar now comes from the private sector. Federal R and D spending creates jobs for scientists and engineers directly and for professionals in business, law, accounting and many other fields indirectly. This support also underwrites the development of valuable intellectual property that, through a process of technology transfer from the public domain to the private sector, forms the basis of still more capital investment, job creation and wealth creation. Federal funding for leading science and technology government agencies has also slipped. Increases in the federal R and D budget will fail to keep pace with inflation for the first time in ten years, up in FY 2006 a barely perceptible 0. 1 percent. Most non-defense agencies performing R and D will see their budgets decline. National 5 Science Foundation research grants will be reduced for the second consecutive year. To turn a blind eye to R and D is to turn a blind eye to the future. Less government R and D means less basic research; less basic research means a society with less potential for innovation, inspiration and commercial success. Less potential translates to fewer career opportunities for individuals to make a difference in science and...
