: Review: " Janis Dietz encourages her readers to strive to be better, to understand and to be understood, to commit to excellence, to control one's life and to do it with enthusiasm." -- MS In Focus ".encourages anyone who is living with loss or disability to deal with the situation realistically and then use it as a growth experience. Having had multiple sclerosis for over twenty years, Dietz draws upon her own life to promote motivational concepts and coping skills." -- Disability Resources Monthly"This excellent little book deals with how to take the lemon life has dealt you and make lemonade.Heartily recommend[ed]!" -- International Journal of MS Care"Dietz urges readers to realistically acknowledge their losses, but also to focus on what they can still do. She encourages people with physical challenges to take care of themselves, to value relationships, to help others and to maintain a sense of humor even in the midst of loss and difficulty." -- Quest "This is an excellent book for learning how to take the hand you were dealt and developing it to the fullest for maximum results. This book is about climbing out of the valley and climbing to the mountaintop. You'll be both inspired and encouraged." -- Zig Ziglar : About the Author: Janis Dietz, PhD, is a frequent motivational speaker who was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 1988.
