Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .because it is too light for a calcareous deposit of that size; and, secondly, we know if we study the eyes of birds we find in the vitreous body a lot of deposit of osseous matter. If you take the eye of an old rooster you will oftentimes find a lot of ossification there; you do not find a calcareous deposit. Then in those birds that fly very high or have to withstand the pressure of the air, you find in front of the macula, partly covering the papillae of the nerve, an arrangement that looks like a spread hand, and which is supposed to be folded in front of the eye to protect it from too high pressure on the nerve, and if you take out this thing you find that it is the very finest osseous formation. Calcareous deposits you will moitly find...
